

DUKE OF EDINBURGH MEETS 'THE YOUTH OF LEEDS IN A FLYING VISIT

LEFT—The Duke of Edinburgh chats with members of a drill squad formed by the 8th Leeds Company of the Boys' Brigade, at Burley Methodist Church. With the Duke is Mr. E. L. Peck, captain of the company. LEFT CENTRE.—The Duke waves goodbye as his train moves out of Leeds City Station at the end of his visit. ABOVE.—Members of a Church Lads' Brigade gymnastic team form a pyramid during the Duke's visit to Clayton Hall, Elford Place. RIGHT.—The Duke savours the smell of food being prepared over a camp fire by Peter Anderson at the Lawnswood Y.M.C.A.

A perfect example of the man with 'go' in him

Evening Post Reporter

THE Duke of Edinburgh breezed through Leeds last night in four hours of keen questioning of the youth of the city. He wanted to know what progress was being made in his Award Scheme, which is designed to toughen teenage boys morally and physically and give them a bit of "go."

He found out what progress was being made . . . and the boys found out that the Duke was a perfect example of the man with "go."

From the time his helicopter landed on Woodhouse Moor (with himself at the controls) to the time he left Leeds by train 20 minutes after the scheduled time, the Duke let no question go unasked and nothing of interest go unnoticed.

'Wrinkle' on rigging

His first call was on the Boys' Brigade at Burley Methodist Church, Cardigan Lane. Life Boys formed one guard of honour and boys from the Leeds companies a second.

The Duke showed that he either makes model ships or someone has shown him how. Mr. G. Dickinson, an instructor with the 20th Company, was showing boys how model galleons are made. The Duke asked whether the plans gave a "wrinkle" on how to make the rigging.

"The plan didn't."
 "Well," said the Duke, "you take your cotton, weight it at the bottom, glue it well and hang it up. When the glue is dry the cotton becomes rigid. You can then cut it up into lengths and stick it on the ship."

The Duke dined in the Food Technology Department of the College of Technology. (The menu: Melon, fillet of sole, fillet of vegetables, devilled devils are prur bacon. The meal 18-year-old day had of their The Picke